The Myth of Abundant Manpower

Sudden spurt in outsourcing across the industry has witnessed major changes in the ways of working of Indian industry. Most of the major global players in the world have set up subsidiaries or partnership in India. The major attraction behind this is "abundance of cheap technical manpower". This may have been the case before the start of the growth phase, but now in fact there is an acute shortage of qualified and trained manpower.

The problem lies in quality and not quantity of manpower. Virtually every industry from IT, Retail, Finance, telecommunication, manufacturing and biotechnology is struggling to find skilled workers and managers as they expand. Based on the report of MHRD, this sector boasts of 46 Central Universities, 342 State Universities, 227 State Private universities, 125 Deemed to be Universities, 51 Institutions of National Importance (established under Acts of Parliament) under MHRD (IITs - 16, NITs - 30 and IISERs - 5). The number of colleges has also reached to 37,204, as on 31st March, 2013.

Industry in 2016 and Beyond

Recent NASSCOM surveys showcased that over 75% of IT graduates are not ready for jobs. India's $146 billion IT industry is spending almost $2 billion a year training them to be fit for jobs. This calls for increasing role of academia to participate in the success of the industry. Out of 400m employable people in India, only 10% are employed in organized sector and only 2% are placed by recruitment agencies.

Industry in India is under acute pressure due to the following reasons:

- Lack of trained manpower
- Rising resource cost and attrition
- Decreasing billing rates/revenue due to recession and competition
- Rising cost of infrastructure

Revisiting the Skills

Apart from necessary technical and domain expertise, the following skills are deemed essential for successful project execution:

1. Effective communication skills
2. Problem-solving/ Team work
3. On the spot decision making
4. Cross cultural understanding
5. Broader vision of industry

Is there a Solution? Pressing the Success Key

Indian industry has started following the Lean Management Principles to minimize the cost. In this scenario there is a sudden increase in demand of multi skilled resources across the levels as they are a cost effective solution for the human resource part of the challenge being faced by the industry. The obvious solution for these problems is the RIGHT SKILLED RESOURCES that can be either trained in house or hired.
